The Effect of a Single Dose of Intravenous Cefazolin Sodium on the Urinary Tract Infection Rate in Patients With Open Fractures of the Lower Limbs

JAMES M. HARRIS, MD, PhD,*† and JAMES L. STANLEY, MD‡§¶||

ABSTRACT.—The purpose of this study was to determine if a single dose of intravenous cefazolin sodium could reduce the urinary tract infection rate in patients with open fractures of the lower limbs. A total of 100 patients were randomized to receive either a single dose of intravenous cefazolin sodium or no antibiotic prophylaxis. The results showed that the urinary tract infection rate was significantly lower in the group receiving cefazolin sodium than in the control group. These findings suggest that a single dose of intravenous cefazolin sodium may be effective in reducing the urinary tract infection rate in patients with open fractures of the lower limbs. (J. Mil. Med. 1995;160:48-51.)

INTRODUCTION

Urinary tract infections (UTIs) are a common complication of open fractures of the lower limbs.¹ The incidence of UTI ranges from 1% to 10% in patients with open fractures of the lower limbs.² The most common organism isolated from patients with UTI is Escherichia coli.³ The risk factors for UTI in patients with open fractures of the lower limbs include prolonged hospitalization, catheterization, and the use of antibiotics.⁴

Cefazolin sodium is a first-generation cephalosporin antibiotic. It is active against many gram-positive and gram-negative bacteria. Cefazolin sodium is commonly used for the treatment of various types of bacterial infections, including UTI.⁵

The purpose of this study was to determine if a single dose of intravenous cefazolin sodium could reduce the urinary tract infection rate in patients with open fractures of the lower limbs.

MATERIALS AND METHODS

This study was conducted at the University of Texas Medical Branch, Galveston, Texas. The study was approved by the Institutional Review Board. All patients gave informed consent before participating in the study.

A total of 100 patients with open fractures of the lower limbs were randomized to receive either a single dose of intravenous cefazolin sodium or no antibiotic prophylaxis. The patients were divided into two groups: the cefazolin sodium group and the control group. The cefazolin sodium group received a single dose of intravenous cefazolin sodium (1 g) immediately after surgery. The control group received no antibiotic prophylaxis.

All patients had a urinary catheter inserted during surgery. Urine samples were collected from the catheters at 24 hours, 48 hours, and 72 hours after surgery. The urine samples were cultured and sensitivity tested. The primary outcome measure was the urinary tract infection rate at 24 hours post-surgery. Secondary outcome measures included the urinary tract infection rate at 48 hours and 72 hours post-surgery, and the overall urinary tract infection rate.

RESULTS

The results of the study are shown in Table 1. The urinary tract infection rate at 24 hours post-surgery was significantly lower in the cefazolin sodium group (5%) compared to the control group (15%). The urinary tract infection rate at 48 hours post-surgery was also significantly lower in the cefazolin sodium group (10%) compared to the control group (20%). The urinary tract infection rate at 72 hours post-surgery was not significantly different between the two groups (15% vs 18%). The overall urinary tract infection rate was significantly lower in the cefazolin sodium group (15%) compared to the control group (25%).

DISCUSSION

These findings suggest that a single dose of intravenous cefazolin sodium may be effective in reducing the urinary tract infection rate in patients with open fractures of the lower limbs. This result is important because UTI is a common complication of open fractures of the lower limbs, and it can lead to serious complications if not treated promptly.

There are several limitations to this study. First, the sample size was relatively small (n = 100). Second, the study was conducted over a short period of time (6 weeks). Third, the study did not include a placebo group. Fourth, the study did not include a long-term follow-up. Finally, the study did not include a comparison of other antibiotics.

Despite these limitations, the results of this study suggest that a single dose of intravenous cefazolin sodium may be effective in reducing the urinary tract infection rate in patients with open fractures of the lower limbs. Further studies are needed to confirm these findings and to determine the optimal dosage and duration of therapy.
